2 Arab Terrorists Attack
Israeli Jetliner in Athens

ATHENS, Dec. 26—Two Arab gunmen opened fire on a New York-bound Israeli jetliner as it prepared to take off from the Athens airport today. One of the 41 passengers was killed, the Boeing 707’s port engine was wrecked and the plane caught fire.

One of the bullets that ripped the windows killed Lani Shorlian, a 28-year-old Israeli businessman and engineer. A 28-year-old Israeli housewife, Hannah Leb, suffered a fractured leg and serious spinal injuries when she jumped out of the plane. She was taken to a hospital.

Israeli warned Arab governments backing communism that Arab airliners were as vulnerable as Israeli planes, Reuters reported. Premier Levi Eshkol called the attack “insane terrorism.” (Page 3.)

Chased on Runway

The two suspects were caught and disarmed by the Greek police after a chase on the runway while fire squads put out the fire on the El Al plane, preventing the explosion of the 30,000-pound fuel tank.

The suspects were later identified as Mahbub M. Shireman, 19, of Tripoli, Libya, who said he was a student, and Mahmoud M. Mohamad, 25, a Palestinian Arab who said he was a teacher. They are to appear before the state public prosecutor tomorrow.

Witnesses said that the El Al plane, scheduled to complete regular Flight 253 from Tel Aviv to New York via Athens, was warming up its engines when the attack came at 11:30 A.M. Athens time.

Two men proding as passengers approached. One of them, carrying a bag, pulled out a submachine gun and opened fire on the plane’s engines.

Grenades Thrown at Engines

The other hurled what was described as incendiary grenades at the jet engines. As one engine caught fire, the aircraft’s doors were thrown open and the crew prepared emergency slides for the passengers to reach the ground.

One of the inflatable slides was hit by a bullet and put out of action. As the passengers slid out of the plane they had to duck bullets to run toward the buildings.

Greek policemen converged on the gunners, who continued to fire, scattering leaflets at the same time identifying themselves as members of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The handbills gave in question-and-answer form in English “our aims and objectives.” They said that the Front was not anti-Semitic “because the Arabs are Semites.”

The two suspects were questioned by Deputy Premier

Continued on Page 2, Column 4
Arab Terrorists Attack an Israeli Jet in Athens

Continued From Page 1, Col. 3

Stylianos Patsukos, who had hurried to the airport. They told him that they were Arab commandos with "orders to destroy an Israeli plane and kill Jews."

Later the men were interrogated by Greek intelligence and taken to Athens Security Police headquarters for the night.

The Athens public prosecutor said he would charge them with murder, illegal possession and use of arms, and damage to foreign property.

The police said that the machinegun bore no identification marks but others said it was a Soviet-made weapon.

25 Bullet Holes Seen

About 25 bullet holes were seen. Experts said that four incendiary grenades had been thrown. Two more were found still in the bag.

The two suspects arrived in Athens at 10:34 A.M., from Beirut aboard an Air France jet. They were paged in the lounge and reported missing when the Air France plane took off for Paris at 11:22 A.M.
Twenty-eight minutes later the El Al plane was attacked.

They were traveling on the type of passports used by refugees or stateless persons.

They are to be tried before a Greek criminal court unless, in view of martial law in effect in Greece, the military authorities ask that they be tried under the summary procedures of a special military court.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.